QUESTION 1: UNSEEN TEXT COMPREHENSION.

Read the following passage and then answer the questions that follow.

The question is at least as old as Socrates: If we know what the right thing to do is, why do we not do it? It is an especially acute question when applied to global warming. The scientific evidence showing that carbon dioxide emissions are already changing the planet's climate, and are likely to have severe effects (melting ice caps, sea-level rise and species extinction), is compelling and now barely disputed. Almost 90% of Europeans say they recognize climate change as a major issue, and 75% identify fossil fuel emissions as a major cause.

And yet, as was widely discussed at a conference of environmentalists, geologists and writers in May 2006 in Ankenohe, Germany, public understanding has not translated into even the simplest of public actions. Less than 1% of Britons, for example, have switched their home electricity to renewable sources, even though it requires little more than a phone call to one's existing provider. Proportions on the continent are slightly higher, but there is clearly no rush to go green or - shudder - stop driving cars.

Why such a disconnect between information and action? Part of the problem is that environmental advocates emit mixed messages. In mid-May 2006, Britain's Guardian published a front-page story showing that five companies in Britain produce more carbon dioxide pollution in a year than all the country's motorists combined. That must be a strong argument for targeting industries, but the average reader could hardly be blamed for thinking, "Why should I bother to cut down my driving?"

Similarly, not enough thought has been devoted to the best role for government. Climate change is too vast a problem for individuals to solve alone, and some big businesses have an incentive not to solve it. That leaves government to take the lead, which is tricky, because over-reliance on government can allow individuals to fob off their own responsibilities. What is worse, government power seems to tickle autocratic fantasies. In my experience, environmentalists spend far too much energy advocating hardline government 'solutions' that do not stand a chance of being enacted. Sure, it might be good for the planet if governments banned the use of sports-utility vehicles or, for that matter, of all fossil fuels. Yet not only is it hard to sell outright prohibitions to voters, but the sad truth is that governments have a woeful record in even the mildest interventions. One of the most significant innovations in the last decade has been Europe's carbon-emission trading scheme: some 12,000 companies, responsible for more than half of the EU's emissions, have been assigned quotas. Companies with unused allowances can sell them; the higher the price, the greater the incentive for firms to cut their use of fossil fuels. The system seemed to work for about a year — but now it turns out that Europe's governments allocated far too many credits, which will likely hinder the program's effectiveness for years.

Perhaps the real reason that well-intentioned consumers do not change is that they do not see any benefit. Climate change may be a frightening, irreversible calamity, but its worst effects will not be felt next week or next year. The planet looks the same regardless of whether we use environmentally friendly technology or we do not care how much carbon dioxide we emit. But as surely as the sun rises and sets every day, if we do not cut down on carbon emissions, then we may not have a planet to hand over to the next generation.

QUESTION TWO: SEEN TEXT COMPREHENSION (25 MARKS)

Nicole: I have absolutely no intention of deviating from any professional obligations as a teacher, madam Principal.

Narine: Everything done in this school must serve the single purpose of preparing the students entrusted to us to be responsible and productive citizens. I will not stand or allow anything that will distract you, or any member of staff, or the students, or even myself, from pursuing this mission. You must ,therefore , figure out a way of putting this matter to rest.I think what you are doing is good. But it must not derail us from the greater good that is the mission of this school. Do you understand?

Nicole: Yes, yes. I understand, madam Principal. But would you rather that we abandon such an ingenious innovation, with great potential of improving governance in our municipality just to appease a self seeking political class?

Narine: Listen to me, young lady. I am a seasoned administrator and I know the value of learning how to pick battles. You need to know which battles to wage, which ones to avoid and which ones to defer. What battle can a young girl like you have with the Mayor? If you dare an elephant into a wrestling match, will it not trample on you?

Nicole: An elephant that kills a rat is not a hero, madam Principal.....

Narine: Shss...Shss...did I hear a voice like that of the Mayor? (The two listen. A loud, deep And strong voice can be heard at the secretary's office)

Nicole: Yes, that must be him.

Narine: Shss..Shss....now listen to me. I have to draw the boundary between the school and politics. I will not be part of any discussions about the App. You have to handle it by yourself, and the bottom line is that the school has nothing to do with The Samaritan App. Alright?

Nicole: Alright madam Principal. (Just then, the door swings and Mayor Mossi walks in. The Principal and Nicole rise to greet him. The trio shakes hands)

Mossi: (Places his phones, hat and walking stick and sits down heavily beside the Principal. then he turns to Nicole) So did you do what I asked you to do the last time I was here?

Nicole: Yes,sir, I did. (The door opens. The Secretary walks in, serves the trio with drinks then leaves)

Mossi: (Sips from his cup, then looks up to Nicole) But I heard the national launch is still On?

Nicole: I did a letter to the ministry detailing your concerns. They wrote back through the Principal.

Mossi: (Looking surprised) Detailing my concerns?(Turning to the Principal questioningly) Well, you never brought that to my attention?

QUESTION THREE: LITERARY APPRECIATION. (20MKS)

Read the poem below and then answer the questions that follow.

The owner of yam peels his yam in the house:
A neighbour knocks at the door
The owner of yam throws his yam in the bedroom:
The neighbour says, “I just heard
A sound, ‘kerekere’, that is why I came,”
The owner of the yam replies,
“That was nothing, I was sharpening two knives.”
The neighbour says again, “I still heard
Something like ‘bi’ sound behind the door.”
The owner of the yam says,
“I merely tried my door with a mallet.”
The neighbour says again,
“What about this huge fire burning on your hearth?”
The fellow replies,
“I am merely warming water for my bath.”
The neighbour persists,
“Why is your skin all white, when this is not the Harmattan season?”
The fellow is ready with his reply,
I was rolling on the floor when I heard the death of Agadapidi.”
Then the neighbour says, “Peace be with you.”
The owner of the yam starts to shut,
“There cannot be peace
Unless the owner of food is allowed to eat his own food!”
